Technology and School Achievement

Complimentary for CASE Members

Facilitator: Dan Maas, CIO, Littleton Public Schools

Technology without a learning goal is like having a car and no idea where to drive it. In an age of "stimulus money" feeding frenzies, budget cuts and more powerful computing in the pocket of your average fifth grader than the Apollo 11 astronauts had on their spaceship, implementing technology in a school system can be a challenging business. Living in the 21st Century but held accountable to achievement on a 20th Century test is a bizarre situation for all of us. Yet, it is possible to pursue 21st Century skills and achieve CSAP gains at the same time.

Join Dan Maas for a leadership discussion on Vision, Policy, Planning, Communication, Training, Budget and Evaluation for Information Technology in schools. In this webinar, Dan Maas, CIO of Littleton Public Schools will outline the technology program that has recently produced the ISTE Technology Leader of the Year 2009, three NSBA Top 20 to Watch educators, three APEX Colorado Top Technology Teacher nominees and 12 educators selected to present at the Technology in Education 2009 conference. Recent CSAP scores show pilot schools significantly increased writing achievement as a result of technology use in class.

Prerequisites

Attendees should have available their district Educational Technology and Information Literacy Plan and have access to district policies on Internet use including GBEE, JS, EGAEA, and your district student code of conduct.
